tered, they are probably only in the copies of the Atlas that were first delivered, the copies purchased by the State and delivered immediately by Mills so that he could collect the $1,200 that was being held pending delivery. The plate was altered again slightly for use as a frontispiece in the 1826 Statistics (having “, & Statistics” added to Lucas’ credit line). For further notes on variants of the Lucas map, cf. Ristow, op. cit., pp. 16-18).

⁷⁴Mills himself reprinted the Atlas in a rare edition of about 1838; the list of governors continues through 1838 with Pierce M. Butler, and in the first edition the list had stopped in 1824 with Richard J. Manning. The second edition can also be distinguished readily from the first because the year 1825 was erased from the printing plates before they were reused. The same plate for Pendleton was reused, but it has a boundary line inserted to reflect the division into Pickens and Anderson Districts, and the title is amended accordingly. The first and second editions are bound similarly in paper-covered boards with leather spine and corners. The maps of both editions can be easily distinguished from subsequent printings because they are the only ones engraved on rag paper. The folio maps vary in size, but the overall dimensions of most of them are approximately 1’ 9 1/2” to 2’ 1”. Eight maps were too large to be printed with a single plate: two plates were used for Barnwell, Beaufort, Colleton, Edgefield, Orangeburg, Pendleton, and Sumter; four plates were used for Charleston. The Charleston map is 3’ 1 5/8” X 3’ 2 3/4”; only the Orangeburgh map is wider (3’ 5”). The maps were attached to tabs and then bound with boards which are about 1’ 7 3/4” X 2’ 3/4”. Frequently the district maps of the first edition are not colored, but the ones of the second edition all seem to have boundaries of magenta watercolor. The state map on the title pages usually has four colors: pink, yellow, blue, and green in the first edition and tan instead of blue in the second.

The third printing of the Atlas was in 1938 by Lucy Hampton Bostick and Fant H. Thornley (Columbia). The maps were uniformly reduced by 20 percent. This printing has an introduction by Francis Marion Hutson, and it was limited to 350 copies. All plates have rose watercolored boundaries, and the boards measure about 1’ 10” by 1’ 6”.

The fourth printing was in 1965 by Robert Pearce Wilkins and John D. Keels, Jr. (Columbia). The plates are full size, but are printed in brown ink on paper that is not laid and that is thinner and yellower than the first two editions. The boards measure about 2’ 5 1/2” X 1’ 11 1/2”. This edition includes an introduction by Charles E. Lee.

The fifth printing was issued by A Press, Inc. (Greenville, August 1979), and reproduced part of the fourth printing in a reduced format. The boards are 11 3/8” X 8 1/8”.

The sixth printing was reproduced from the fourth printing by the Sandlapper Store, Inc., in 1979, but it differs from it in that only five of the district maps are reproduced full size. The remainder vary in the percentage of reduction, but none is less than 72 percent of the original size. The ink color again is brown, and the size of the boards is about 1’ 7 5/8” X 2’ 1 1/2”.

⁷⁵When I began to prepare this introduction, I hoped to summarize all of Mills’s work in South Carolina, but essential documentation at the Department of Archives and History is temporarily unavailable. Since other previously unpublished information has recently become available at the Archives and more fully reveals contributions of the numerous individuals who helped to create the Atlas, I decided to concentrate on this single work and to attempt to do greater justice to everyone involved in the project than I could have to Mills alone.

I am grateful to the Staff of the Archives for suggesting a variety of possible sources, especially to Charles Lee, Dr. Charles H. Lesser, and Miss Wylma Anne Wates. I am also grateful to Michael Stauffer, Harold Delorme, and Robert Mackintosh for locating the needed source material.
