

THOMAS "KANAWHA" SPRATT AT WAHAB'S LANE

(Taken from an article titled "Susannah Smart," Yorkville Enquirer, Thurs, March 6, 1856.)

"In this battle, i. e.: Skirmish at Wahab's Lane in the Waxhaw settlement, Thomas Spratt, then over fifty, received three bullet wounds, and was carried from the field to his own house. A party of British soldiers not long after arrived there. They were told that Mr. Spratt was ill; but they insisted upon having the house for their own sick and the owner was removed into the kitchen. It was here that Major Frazer of the British Army died, while Cornwallis and Rawdon both stood by his bed, and averred, with lifted hands that 'he was one of the best officers who had

THOMAS "KANAWHA" SPRATT AT WAHAB'S LANE

(Taken from an article titled "Susannah Smart," Yorkville Enquirer, Thurs, March 6, 1856.)

"In this battle, i. e.: Skirmish at Wahab's Lane in the Waxhaw settlement, Thomas Spratt, then over fifty, received three bullet wounds, and was carried from the field to his own house. A party of British soldiers not long after arrived there. They were told that Mr. Spratt was ill; but they insisted upon having the house for their own sick and the owner was removed into the kitchen. It was here that Major Frazer of the British Army died, while Cornwallis and Rawdon both stood by his bed, and averred, with lifted hands that 'he was one of the best officers who had crossed the ocean'. A Scotch physician was in attendance; he afterwards went into the kitchen to examine Mr. Spratt, 'What is the matter with you maun?' he asked, 'I have a fever'. The physician felt his pulse and exclaimed, 'Why, maun, you are wounded!' 'And what if I am?' said the patient. 'Ah, I am fearful you have been fighting.' 'I have been fighting for my country and if I was well, I would do it again,' replied Spratt. 'Well, well, you are a brave soldier and I'll dress your wounds for you,' said the Scotchman, and he did so, and attended on him as long as the British troops occupied the house.

"These unbidden guests took from Spratt over 100 head of cattle, hogs, etc."